Visa Debit program chargebacks overview

The purpose of this guide is to assist issuers in understanding the Visa Debit chargeback process for disputed transactions under the Visa network. A chargeback is a request for a retailer to remedy the loss on a fraudulent or disputed transaction.

When a cardholder engages an issuer to dispute a transaction with a valid reason, the issuer collects the transaction details and documents all pertinent information in accordance with the issuer's designated settlement agent's requirements. The issuer's designated settlement agent then engages the FIS Everlink Settlement team with the appropriate documentation. From there, the FIS Everlink Settlement team works with Visa on the issuer's behalf for all transactions eligible for chargebacks.

Fraud-related chargebacks

This section outlines the steps that need to be taken to process a dispute under Dispute category 10 (Fraud) and related activity.

Dispute Condition 10.4: Other Fraud – Card-Absent Environment Dispute Reasons	Country/Region
The Cardholder denies authorization of or participation in a Transaction conducted in a Card-Absent Environment.	All

A Dispute is invalid if it's a Secure Electronic Commerce Transaction processed using both an Authenticated Payment Credential and Electronic Commerce Indicator (ECI) 5 in the Authorization Request, if both:

- The Token Authentication Verification Value (TAVV) was included in the Authorization Request.
- The Issuer or Token Requestor approved a Cardholder Verification request with an approved Verification Method.

Issuers are limited to 35 disputes for a single cardholder PAN within the previous 120 calendar days. A submitted dispute beyond this threshold is invalid.

Dispute

After receiving a presentment, an issuer may initiate a dispute up to 120 calendar days from the transaction processing date. The dispute amount must be either the full billed amount or a partial amount equal to the disputed portion.

If a credit was processed before the dispute, the issuer must either:

- Apply the credit(s) to the disputed transaction, or
- Provide the transaction identifier(s) or Acquirer Reference Number(s), along with the transaction date(s) when the credit(s) were applied and explain why the credit(s) do not resolve the dispute.

An issuer must dispute each transaction separately.

Pre-Arbitration

In response to a dispute, the acquirer may initiate a pre-arbitration attempt, as specified under the applicable dispute condition, within 30 calendar days from the dispute processing date.

An acquirer must provide the following documentation or certification for a pre-arbitration attempt. This may include evidence that a credit or reversal issued by the merchant was not addressed by the issuer in the dispute, or compelling evidence supporting the transaction.

Pre-Arbitration response

An issuer may respond to a pre-arbitration attempt by either accepting financial responsibility or declining the evidence within 30 calendar days from the processing date of the pre-arbitration attempt. To give FIS Everlink enough time for processing the trace, a request to decline the evidence needs to come within 10 business days from the date of receipt of the proof.

If the acquirer has supplied compelling evidence with its pre-arbitration attempt, the issuer must certify that:

- The contact information provided does not match the cardholder's information in its records; and
- The issuer has contacted the cardholder to review the compelling evidence and provide an explanation as to why the cardholder continues to dispute the transaction.

Arbitration

The acquirer may file for arbitration within 10 calendar days from the processing date of the pre-arbitration response, once the dispute and pre-arbitration cycle has been completed and the parties have been unable to resolve the dispute.

Issuer due diligence for fraudulent accounts

1. Issuers must block claims initiated for transactions that occurred after the first fraud chargeback on the same account number.
2. As part of fraud management, issuers are required to manage fraudulent accounts appropriately, including closing the account when necessary. If issuers do not take the necessary steps to prevent fraud on the same account number, they cannot pass liability to the acquirer for subsequent fraud cases.

Non-fraud-related chargebacks

This section outlines the steps required to process a dispute under:

- Dispute Category 12 (Processing Errors), and
- Dispute Category 13 (Consumer Disputes).

Dispute

After receiving a presentment, an issuer may initiate a dispute up to 120 calendar days from the transaction processing date under the applicable reason code only for the following conditions:

- a. A credit was processed as a debit, or a debit was processed as a credit.
- b. The cardholder was not refunded the full amount.
- c. The transaction currency differs from the currency transmitted through VisaNet.
- d. The transaction amount is incorrect, or an addition or transposition error occurred.
- e. Duplicate processing of the transaction, or the transaction was paid by other means.
- f. The cardholder participated in the transaction but did not receive merchandise, services, or cash.

The dispute amount must be either the full billed amount or a partial amount equal to the disputed portion.

If a credit was processed before the dispute, the issuer must either:

- Apply the credit(s) to the disputed transaction; or
- Provide the transaction identifier(s) or Acquirer Reference Number(s), along with the transaction date(s) when the credit(s) were applied and explain why the credit(s) do not resolve the dispute.

An issuer must dispute each transaction separately.

For transactions paid by other means, the cardholder must certify that they attempted to resolve the dispute with the merchant and provide evidence of the payment made by other means.

If the dispute requires the issuer to provide the acquirer with a cardholder letter confirming non-receipt of merchandise, services, or cash, the letter must be signed by the cardholder and include the cardholder's partial payment credential, merchant name, and transaction amount.

Dispute response

The acquirer may initiate a dispute response, as specified under the applicable dispute condition, within 30 calendar days from the dispute processing date. The acquirer may either provide evidence that a credit or reversal issued by the merchant was not addressed by the issuer in the dispute, or an approved transaction receipt.

Pre-Arbitration

A pre-arbitration attempt is the stage of the dispute cycle in which the issuer must address the information or evidence provided by the acquirer in the dispute response. To give FIS Everlink enough time for processing the trace, a request to decline the evidence needs to come within 10 business days from the date of receipt of the proof.

The issuer may initiate pre-arbitration under the following conditions:

- The issuer changes the dispute condition after receiving the dispute response.
- The issuer provides new documentation or information to the acquirer regarding the dispute.
- If the acquirer provided evidence that the cardholder no longer disputes the transaction, the issuer must certify that the cardholder continues to dispute the transaction

Pre-Arbitration response

The acquirer may respond to the pre-arbitration attempt within 30 calendar days from the processing date of the pre-arbitration attempt by either accepting financial responsibility or declining the pre-arbitration.

Arbitration

The issuer may file for arbitration within 10 calendar days from the processing date of the pre-arbitration response if:

- The dispute and pre-arbitration cycle has been completed.
- The issuer has been unable to resolve the dispute; and
- The acquirer has not met the requirements specified in the Visa Rules.

Pricing and billing overview

FIS Everlink levies a processing fee per chargeback request that will be billed to the issuer by FIS Everlink via the issuer's monthly FIS Everlink invoice. The per chargeback processing fee is as defined in the issuers Visa debit agreement. In case of multiple chargebacks for the same cardholder, FIS Everlink levies a single chargeback processing fee.
